You can tag dive logs with preset keywords like “recreational,” “wreck,” “training,” etc., and upload photos and videos. Two separate, manual fields provide a place for public and private notes. Garmin computers record surface GPS information for each dive, which the app displays on each log and uses to plot dives in a unique map view. However, location is not one of the options used to filter and sort dives.

If all of this isn't enough, the Diveproof Logbooks, brainchild of Gemma Thompson, a Master Scuba Diver Trainer with a degree in Environmental Geography, wanted to ensure that not only were they durable and water resistant, but environmentally friendly too. The synthetic paper, not made from trees, uses a manufacturing process that does not emit any ozone threatening emissions and uses very little water.
